OUR PROSPERITY IS POST WAR MIRACLE

NATION IN GOOD TIMES ERA REVERSES HIT OTHER LANDS

Mounting Figures of Treasury Surplus is Definite Percentage of Country's Profits — Threatened Anthracite Coal Strike is Only Reason for Interruption.

One of the chief concerns attached here to the threatened anthracite coal strike is the interruption to a national prosperity which, taken as a whole, is looked upon as almost a miracle.

Two of the states that depend most on anthracite, New York and Pennsylvania, have just been shown by government reports to be doing a volume of business they never before approached.

The combined output of these two states in 1923 was greater than the output of the entire country in 1924, or any year preceding that. This condition continues up to date and is representative of the country as a whole.

Measured by every test, whether in the line of saving as shown by saving bank deposits and life insurance or in spending as reflected by automobile and radio sales, America is enjoying a prosperity beyond all expectation.

That the country nearly eight years after the ending of a great war, should find itself with a record of having passed through the post war readjustment without any period of nationwide unemployment or depression, is a miracle of the recent past.

That the present condition should be maintained is obviously a chief concern of the administration, not only for political reasons easily apparent but also as a natural function of any well intentioned government. That America should have maintained the general stability it has had during the post war period is a fact without precedent in other nations following the recent war, and without precedent in America following the Civil War.

Great Britain has had a practically continuous strain of unemployment accompanied by five changes of government. France has avoided unemployment, but only by practicing a financial policy even more disastrous in its later consequences than temporary unemployment.

America by eight years after the Civil War, had passed through two major crises. Even to the government officials most concerned in achieving and maintaining this happy condition now existing in America, the condition itself is partly a miracle.

It is a fact that during the 1920 campaign some of the most responsible Republican leaders hoped they would not win, because they anticipated that whatever party should be in office during the eight post-war years would endure such unavoidable economic debacles as to discredit it for a generation.

They recognize that the prosperity during the past eight years has not been universal. There was a period of acute distress in farms; the textile industry is just emerging from a major depression, part of the soft coal industry is still in a depression brought about largely by the same sort of excessive demands that the anthracite miners just now contemplate making.

In spite of these exceptions, there exists the infallible index of general prosperity, the mounting figures of the treasury surplus which is a definite percentage of the country's profits.

What to do with that surplus constitutes one of the few controverted questions of policy the country has, the difference between President Coolidge and Secretary Mellon, who want the federal government to abandon taxation of inheritances, and Chairman Green of the ways and means committee, who wants to keep it. That difference is more apparent than real. President Coolidge wants the federal government to stop taxing inheritances in order that the states may have all that form of revenue to themselves.

Chairman Green really wants the same thing, only he wishes to make sure the states will get it. Chairman Green wants the federal government to collect inheritance taxes, but is willing that the money should be turned back to the state treasurers. He says that if the federal government abandons collecting inheritance taxes, the states may fail to get them because of rich persons taking up their residences in Florida, which lays no inheritance taxes, or, in other states that may hold out similar temptations to the wealthy.

But this technical difference about one way to act in the presence of a federal treasury surplus is much less striking than the fact that there is a treasury surplus to differ about.

After the Civil War, that condition did not arise for 20 years. It exists today in spite of almost continuous anxiety and prophecy to the contrary. Prophecies made on the occasion of each of the tax reductions, and made with especial emphasis at the time the soldiers' bonus bill was passed, when it was said and sincerely believed, the treasury could not stand the strain.

While this prosperity was not wholly hoped for and only partly explained by its own preventative and curative efforts, intelligent and vigorous as they were—naturally such an administration is watchful for the continuance of that happy condition. Great, though it is, it rests necessarily on a delicate balance. At this moment, with the single exception of the threatened anthracite coal strike, no reason is seen for interruption.

AN EGYPTOLOGER

Columbus, July 2.—(UP.)—Attorney General Crabbe today in an opinion asked by the prosecutor at Dayton ruled that county commissioners must build and maintain bridges in cities on state and county highways.

The commissioners have no authority over bridges not on state or county roads, the attorney general said. It is the duty of the city to care for and build these bridges, Crabbe held.

The cities, Crabbe said, are under no legal duty to build bridges on state and county roads within the city limits but they may do so if they see fit.

J. A. WHITE IS A CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR

Former Superintendent of Ohio Anti-Saloon League to Make Race.

Columbus, July 3.—(UP.)—The unofficial announcement that James White, former state director of the Anti-Saloon League, will again seek the Republican gubernatorial nomination is taken here as a precautionary move against the possible candidacy of Major Roy Haynes, United States prohibition chief.

White and Haynes, naturally, would be bound to run on virtually identical platforms so the White backers came out with their man's announcement early enough to get a place on the ground floor.

There was nothing especially startling about the announcement save that it was hardly expected so early. That White expected to be a candidate was revealed at the last primary when in congratulating Harry Davis on his victory White said he never had won anything the first time he tried. This indicated clearly he intended to run again.

White's formal announcement of his candidacy is expected in the autumn.

CIRCLEVILLE WOMEN VISIT AT HOSPITAL

Good Program Was Rendered For the Old Ladies in the Home.

The Circleville Woman's Christian Temperance Union, spent a most profitable and enjoyable day, Friday at the Home and Hospital. In the morning after the song, "America" and prayer by Mrs. Lawrence Warner, and scripture by the president, a short business session was held. A few superintendents of departments gave their reports among them Mrs. Grace B. Allen, of the Christian Civilization and Legislation who urged every woman to go out to the polls and vote at the primary.

The call then came for dinner and such a dinner, an elegant chicken dinner with all the trimmings, served in abundance, with ice cream and cake. About fifty were there to enjoy this, with the inmates of the Home. Miss Lydia Leist, was the efficient chairman for the day and with her committee, certainly entertained everyone royally.

At two o'clock all gathered again in the specious living room where the following program was rendered under the direction of Miss Lydia Leist:

The opening sang was "Rock of Ages"; the scripture was composed of different texts, which had been given out previously to all present to be read. These texts are samples of the ones used in the Flower Mission work. Mother Smith, one of the old ladies at the Home, then led in prayer. A beautiful solo, "In the Garden" was sung by Mrs. Mack Noggle.

Mrs. Bessie Long followed with a talk "Our Work for Today." An appeal for training the young and preparing them for the great work that lies ahead.

A duet, "Variations of Happy Day" was beautifully rendered by Misses Verda and Katherine Eymann.

Mrs. Adams, another one of the Home, gave a recitation; "If there Ain't no Devil, Who is Carrying on His Work?" Miss Adams possesses the remarkable ability of memorizing and can give wonderful recitations, which is rarely found in one of her age.

Mrs. Emman Dresbach Kraft, of Longmont, Colorado, was introduced and spoke of her work, and the success she is having with the L. T. L. work in her district. We were all glad to hear from Mrs. Kraft, glad to see how her enthusiasm and interest was helping in the work.

Miss Frances Jones then gave a piano solo. The program then closed with the song, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds" and the W. C. T. U. benediction. The Home was filled with a profusion of flowers, gifts from the visitors and all departed in the late afternoon well pleased with the day's work.

Both pleaded guilty. Sentence was deferred on motion for mitigation of punishment.

Columbus, July 2.—(UP.)—The Dayton, Covington and Piqua Interurban line today protested against the proposed issuance of a bus line between Dayton and Covington and Coleman between Dayton and Piqua. The interurban company's petition declared the territory already is adequately covered.

Warren, July 2.—Two gasoline station bandits were captured today after robbing Harry Miller, an attendant, of $200. The loot was recovered.

A System of Farming That Brings Health and Prosperity

Every farm, regardless of the method of farming practiced or of the crops raised, should have at least a few good milch cows to provide

- (1) Enough milk, cream and butter for home use;
- (2) Enough skim-milk to raise some calves, pigs and chickens;
- (3) Enough cream or butter to sell to pay, in part or entirely, current living expenses.

This plan has been a "life-saver" for thousands of farmers, especially during the hard times of the past two years. It insures a living, at least, and often other income besides.

Such a plan pays best with a De Laval Cream Separator. It soon pays for itself—and skims cleaner, lasts longer and is easier to operate and clean than any other.

ANCIENT BOOK WAS PRINTED IN YEAR 1794

George Heinzelman has Rare Volume Bound in Wood and Leather.

The cause of Chief Logan's vengeance on the whites of the Scioto Valley is described in an old book now the property of County Commissioner George Heinzelman, whose hobby is old volumes. Many people have wondered why the love of this great Indian character of early days for the white man changed to an intense hate. Mr. Heinzelman's volume bound in wood and leather, printed in 1794, and titled "The American Preceptor" tells the reason.

This book printed 20 years after the incident tells the story as follows: "In the spring of the year 1774 a robbery and murder were committed on an inhabitant of the frontiers of Virginia by two Indians of the Shawnee tribe. The neighboring whites, according to their custom, undertook to punish this outrage in a summary way. Colonel Cresap, a man infamous for the many murders he had committed on those much injured people, collected a party and proceeded down the Kanawa in quest of vengeance.

Unfortunately, a canoe of women and children, with one man only, was seen coming from the opposite shore, unarmed and unsuspecting any hostile attack from the whites. Cresap and his party concealed themselves on the bank of the river; and the moment the canoe reached the shore, singled out their objects, and at one fire, killed every person in it.

"This happened to be the family of Logan, who had long been distinguished as the friend of the whites. This unworthy return provoked his vengeance. He accordingly signalled himself into the war which ensued."—Scioto Gazette.

CHICAGO AND NEW YORK ARE NOW UNITED

Air Mail Service Overnight—Course is 744 Miles, 32 Landing Fields.

Overnight mail service between the two largest cities of the country was started when mail planes hopped off at dusk from New York and Chicago, the first of regular flights.

Flying over a beacon-lighted course the mail carriers of the air passed over the slumbering country.

Along the 774-mile course there are 32 landing fields, with searchlights of 5,000,000 candle power to guide the flyers. Intermittent flashlights and beacons designate emergency landing fields.

The eastbound planes carried nearly a ton of bank clearings, love missives, jewelry, business correspondence, flowers and the contributions of faddists.

Vice President Charles G. Dawes gave the official "go" to the eastbound planes in a radio address broadcast from a station to Maywood Field. The Vice President also sent aboard one of the planes a box of flowers addressed to Colonel John Coolidge, father of President Coolidge, who is ill at Plymouth, Vt.

Mayor William E. Deever, Chicago, Colonel Paul Henderson, Assistant Postmaster General; Postmaster Arthur C. Lueder and others participated in the ceremonies attendant to the launching of the eastbound planes, and a committee of women members viewed the start from another airplane.

Included in the mail was an invitation to Mayor John F. Hylan, of New York, to visit Chicago, extended by the Chicago Association of Commerce, and a greeting from William R. Dawes, President of the Chicago Association to Lucius R. Eastman, President of the Merchants' Association of New York. The message said:

"As time and distance are lessened between communities as well as nations, the larger problems of each, perhaps once regarded as unrelated, become common to all, and their solution when achieved benefits, not one section, but all sections. Therefore, in the closer bringing together, resulting from the expansion of the aid mail to include night flying, may be found another definite means for the promotion of happiness and prosperity."

Vice President Dawes in his radio address said: "New inventions, new discoveries and new advances come with such frequency these days that oftentimes we little note their importance.

"The establishment tonight of overnight air mail service between New York and Chicago is entitled, however, to more than passing notice. It opens a new chapter in the development of air transportation and points the way to great possibilities.

"This new service means that letters mailed at the Federal Building in Chicago as late as 8 o'clock in the evening will be delivered in New York the next morning at the beginning of the business day. It thereby makes of New York and Chicago one city as far as the United States mails are concerned.

"The advantages of this new service are apparent to every business man in the two cities. Through it Chicago and New York banks will be able to clear as easily as if they were in the same city. Like advantages are afforded to the investment and insurance brokers, to the film industries and to every branch of industry and business in which speed is a factor. I congratulate the postoffice department on the institution of this service and I say, 'bon voyage' to the pilots on their initial flight."

Moeller's Dry Goods & Carpet House will be closed all day July 4. Will be open Friday evening, July 3. 30June4w1.

NOTICE

The clothing stores of Germain Joseph Co. and H. B. Colwell will be closed Saturday, July 4th, until 6 p. m. Open Friday evening and Saturday evening for your convenience.

Are to Wear Long and Short Sleeves

Models Stress Both Styles —Only Sleeveless Gowns for Formal Wear.

Individuality is the keynote of the new Chanel collection which nevertheless interprets all of the novel spring-time themes, notes a Paris fashion writer in the New York Herald-Tribune. Every model that is designed by Chanel bears the hallmark of distinction. She ignores rumors of possible tendencies and quietly continues making gowns on her own characteristic lines, and these are invariably among the most sought after on the continent. Whether she makes a simple sports suit with straight workmanlike breeches under the neat wrap-over skirt, or a georgette crepe coat for afternoon wear that is covered with an elaborate embroidery of tiny steel beads, Chanel always gives that indescribable chic to every model that is typical of her house. Beauty is the leitmotif of the whole collection, yet the models are always practical.

Robes du soir are either elaborate or quite simple. Some are developed in metal lame with heavy incrustations of rich metal lace, while others are of simplest georgette or chiffon depending merely on the charm of their cut, beauty of coloring and the simple grace of various little scarves tied shoulder straps and floating draperies. Lace is very much used for evening gowns in black, beige, green and in other colors, and it plays a considerable part in this section of the collection. Pearl and bead fringes are used, strings six to eight inches in length swaying spirally round a tunic and shorter ones covering a skirt in close serried rows.

The jumper dress occupies its usual pre-eminent place. Chanel uses shades of blue crepe and crepe de chine to carry it out with an effect of chic simplicity. Perhaps the most delightful jumper suit in the whole collection is made in bois de rose waterproof crepe de chine with steel runners fastening the pockets and a reverse decolletage which is at the side instead of the center front.

Abandons Sleeveless Gown.
Like other houses, Chanel has abandoned the sleeveless gown for daytime this season. Instead this shows short sleeves some five or six inches long, some of them finished with handkerchief ties, some of them plain. Full-length sleeves outnumber all other types and they are generally fitted, although some of them widen just the tiniest bit toward the wrist. Attractive tailored suits also play an important part in the collection. Black-and-white checked cheviot is used for one of these which has a white pique waistcoat that fastens down the side. Another model is in navy blue kasha with narrow box plaits in solid panels at the back and front of both coat and skirt. A white blouse accompanies this model. A brown fancy check tweed suit has two-inch borders of two shades of darker brown at the hem of both coat and skirt. With it is worn a plain sweater of natural jersey cloth bound with the tweed at the neck and buttoning down a short slit at one side.

Tweed, kasha and jersey are Chanel's favorite materials for golfing suits. She makes them with practical wrap-over skirts or with a few inverted plaits at the sides, and approximates the slim silhouette although at the same time giving plenty of room for movement. This season she is again using the short scarves that are such a striking finish to the jumper and skirt costume that is worn for golf or morning wear.

Crepe is the material which forms the basis of the collection. In black it is fashioned into simple little street frocks which have a distinct circular movement to the apron front of the skirt, discreet rows of buttons here and there, and occasionally a shoulder cape. Although she uses a great deal of foulard, Chanel is fully awake to the 'rayures,' as the importers call them—is shown in delicately proportioned affairs, echoing the sophistication of the period and the delicate note in the newest prints.

"Another innovation is the border and the scheme in which half the width of the silk is printed in a design wholly different from the other half. This difference is effected quite subtly by a variation in the background, one-half being done on a dark ground, the other half, in the exact design, being printed on a lighter ground. Occasionally an eccentric is shown, such as a geometric print, having vertical lines in one half of the goods and slanting lines in the other. These are especially clever in their adaptable possibilities, for they may be used in a variety of ways in dress designing and in trimmings.

An Array of Designs.
Variants in design are almost without limit. The time-honored and well-beloved polka dot is presented in entirely new arrangement. It is never, in the new silks, printed in regular spaces as heretofore, but is done with unusual flexibility and originality of pattern. There are prints having three tiers of dots in successively increasing size, and those in which open and solid dots are combined. There are octagonal dots, regular plaids formed of very large dots and dots so placed as to form a border.

Another style of printed silk has a name traceable to the Grand Prix ball in the other side, very showily illustrated by the picturesque name of "El Garcon." This is a flashy pattern in which the Spanish influence is apparent, in yellow, red and the copper tones. Much is due to the inspiration had from Spain in both design and color in these most decorative prints. Some of the most swaggar have an ivory ground in which is drawn a sort of cubist floral conception in yellow, brown and maroon. This idea is carried through many variants, diagonal plaids, small blocks, single or in clusters, in strips, scrolls and continual florals.

Patterns showing all-over tiny figures are in reality produced from a design originally bold and swinging. All of these printed in one color on half the width of the fabric, in another color on the other half, offer the most intriguing possibilities to an ingenious couturiere, for the architecture of a gown may thus be varied in many ways. Almost all of these patterns in color are printed on a "blond" or "rose" ground.

Many Colors Are Used.
In contrast to the reds and browns and yellows, with a perfect craze for red in all of its possible shades, some exceptionally beautiful silks are shown in pervenche blue, the design usually traced on a lighter ground, which presents it sharply. This blue is especially successful in the wash silks, and in the printed patterns shares the popularity of copper red, tomato red and the cyclamen pink.

Modistes and smart shops predict a "red" season. Introducing many shades and sorts of red and endless combinations on a "blond" background. "Toile de Sole Clanderella" is the name of a different weave that is printed in many artistic designs, generally of floral type, a charming fabric for elaborate afternoon and evening gowns suitable for late spring or summer.

A ribbed silk shown both plain and printed bears the original names "Cote Dolphin" and "Cote Triton." The novelty, beauty and artistic significance of these printed silks are absorbing, for the moment, the attention of the Paris creators and among the best style designers in this country. And it has become known that while they are of French authorship, originally, they have been adopted by American skill as now presented to the world of fashion and are an altogether American product which the Parisians are themselves taking over.

To one native house alone is due the distinction of developing some of these most important styles, evolved from their industry after study and experience that covers almost a century.

Poor Child

A woman in Birmingham, of great social aspirations, but not lavish of her money in attaining her ends, was accustomed to buy flowers for her functions from an old dame with a stand on the corner.

On one occasion the social aspirant said: "I want a large quantity of flowers from yo' next week, fo' mah daughter's comin'-out."

"All right," replied the old woman. "Yo' is gwine to git de very best I has for the pore chile. What was she sent up fo'?"—Harper's Magazine.

The Card Fan

Bishop Beauchamp said at a Nashville reception the other day:

"Our church, the Methodist church, permits dancing and card playing now. Well, I suppose it had to come. The young are constantly crazy over dancing and card playing."

"There's a story about a family that was crazy over card playing. The father died, and some of the relatives wanted him cremated, while others wanted him buried. The decision finally was left to the eldest son, a terrible bridge fanatic. The young man thought a while and then said: "I guess I'll make it spades."

The time is passed when the measure of the value of a memorial is quantity. I hope the time has come when that measure is quality. I care not whether the material be marble or granite, its future will be measured by the character of the design. It is quality that has preserved for us the finest examples in painting and sculpture. It is quality that will stamp our imprint upon cemeteries of the future. Simplicity, correct lines and proportions and proper ornamentation are the real fundamentals. A design that is right, material that is lasting, and perfect workmanship, spells success for the future of this industry and the beautification of the cemetery. National Guard Groups Will

Columbus, July 3.—(UP.)—Adjutant General Frank Henderson, of Ohio, informed Governor Donahey today that Ohio is ready to repulse any attack of a military nature and that thousands of reserves are ready for the call of their government.

This notification was a formality in connection with the national defense test scheduled for tomorrow when all the military organizations of the state will mobilize for a few hours merely as a test of what could be done in event of an emergency.

As defense day plans were brought to a completion today, however, there was every indication that it will not be as absolutely observed as on the first national defense test last Armistice Day, Nov. 11.

Governor Donahey has pledged the co-operation of his commonwealth to the Secretary of War's department in Washington but in doing so he has made it plain that he does not approve of the date selected. The Governor feels that the Fourth of July should be devoted entirely to celebration of the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence and that some other day should have been selected by the government for Defense day.

Information reaching here during the week indicates that Defense Day activities over the state will be very quiet but that Independence Day celebrations will be carried out with their usual vigor.

National guard groups will mobilize but out of town members will not be given their traveling expenses and very few of them are expected to "report for service." Red Cross units in several towns plan to stage demonstrations of their war work.

TO ELIMINATE BAD CROSSING AT PALESTINE

State, County and Railroad
Officials Inspect Site of Many Accidents.

Plans are now under way for the elimination of the "death crossing" of the B. & O. railroad near the village of Era, east of Mt. Sterling on the Three C's Highway.

This crossing, which has witnessed the killing of many people in the past decade, has been a bone of contention for many months and it is said will be eliminated by the railroad, state highway department and Madison county working in co-operation.

The estimated cost of the elimination is given at more than $100,000. If plans are carried out, the track of the railroad will be elevated for some distance on each side and the highway dropped sufficient to allow clearance.

It is proposed to apportion the cost of the improvement as follows: Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., 50 per cent; Madison county, 25 per cent; and the Federal government, through the state highway department, 25 per cent.

The site of the proposed improvement was viewed last Tuesday by state, county and railroad officials and representatives of Mt. Sterling. The party included G. C. Snyder, division engineer of the state highway department; P. A. Callahan, assistant engineer of the B. & O. railroad; J. R. Burke, chief engineer of bridges of the state highway department; Madison County Commissioners W. S. Robinson, L. W. Johnson and Charles Foster; E. E. Harvey, county engineer; H. H. Crabbe, county prosecuting attorney; County Auditor Lamar P. Wilson, all of London; Mayor C. M. Neff of Mt. Sterling and others interested in the project.

The general opinion of the matter was in favor of the complete and immediate elimination of the hazard. It is considered one of the most dangerous and fatal grade crossings in this section, being so constructed that little chance is given motorists to see approaching trains. Several expensive lawsuits have been in the courts here for some time over accidents at the crossing.

Some little opposition was voiced to the improvement on the part of the railroad and one or two officials. The plan outlined in some quarters for widening the approach and installing a red flash light was not considered favorably and probably will be vetoed in favor of total elimination of the crossing.

IN A ROSE GARDEN.

(By Ruby Evans Grimes in Good Housekeeping).

Oh, there was a tall lad
Inquirin' o' the way,
And he came to my gate
Early yesterday
When I was cuttin' roses
For a big bouquet.

So I gave him a smile
And a passion-red rose,
And what else I gave him
Nobody knows—
But he called last night
In his very best clothes.

It's fine to have a tall beau
Beside me a-wooin',
And in and out the day long
No matter what I'm doin',
He laughs and says the way he asked
He had no thought of goin'.

Consider the woodpecker. He uses his head to get a home for himself.

LAW CHANGES IN OPERATION IN THIS MONTH

Referendum Periods Expire on Many Legislative Enactments.

Radical changes in the government of Ohio, revisions in the taxing system, restrictions on business, new powers for government officials and a deluge of minor rules and regulations under which the state and its individuals must function become effective during the 31-day period beginning July 1 as a result of the work of the recent Ohio legislature.

The referendum periods expire on 164 new laws during July, the last day of which will see them all in full force and effect. The list includes a number of measures regarded by legislative leaders as the most important considered during the general assembly.

Among these are the major taxation laws, the Dodd act authorizing additional levies for operating purposes; the Vorys compulsory budget act; the McDonald act requiring reappraisal of real estate every six years; the Dempsey corporation franchise tax law; and the Krueger act regulating the issuance of bonds by political sub-divisions. All these go into effect July 20.

The Bender act designed to end commercial law enforcement by prohibiting fee-splitting, becomes effective July 14. Five days earlier, under the terms of another of Bender's acts, killing a state prohibition officer becomes first degree murder. A third measure by Bender to facilitate removal from office of derelict officials goes into effect the fifteenth.

July 10 is the date after which probate courts will be empowered to regulate public dance halls, knocking them out on Sundays if they see fit. The same law prohibits minors from attending public dances unless attended by their "jazz mammas," fathers or guardians.

The Aigler act abolishing township and ward tax assessors becomes a law July 23.

After July 20 the appropriation for a state probe of the rates of the Ohio Bell Telephone Co., will be available.

Important changes in the law relating to the regulation of motor truck lines becomes effective July 15.

The system of issuing automobile licenses and a 15 cents fee to the issuing official goes into effect when the Lipp motor regulation act becomes a law July 20. After this date also counties will have authority to establish adult probation departments. Other acts becoming laws on this date include:

The Bolton reforestation act cutting taxes of forest lands to encourage reforestation; the Collister-Emmons act providing real estate salesmen must have licenses, and the Farnsworth-Dodd act authorizing the sale of Miami and Erie canal lands in Lucas county to the county commissioners.

The dawn of July 7, however, sees the most important act of all go into effect. This is the $75,000,000 general appropriations bill.

THREE WEEKS' EXPERIENCE IN PRISONS

Mrs. Huck Makes Experiments and Gives Recommendations to Governor.

Chicago, July 2.—(UP.)—Jail life isn't so bad if you have several bars of strongly antiseptic soap, Mrs. Winifred Mason Huck, former congresswoman from Illinois, declared today in revealing her three weeks' experience in the women's prison at Marysville, Ohio.

"Just for the experiment," Mrs. Huck slipped out of Chicago, confident her plans to Governor Vic Donahey of Ohio, attempted to steal a coat, was arrested, brought to trial, and sentenced to jail. After three days in the general women's receiving ward of the Cleveland jail, she was transferred to the Marysville prison where she spent three weeks.

"Don't let anybody tell you that the hard-boiled folks in prison haven't any feelings and emotions," Mrs. Huck said. "My best friend there was a Chicago girl, friend of a gangster. Her pal, named Mabel, was in the Ohio prison while her husband was hanged in California. After hearing what she went through don't let anybody nonchalantly tell you that convicts are only animals with no feelings.

Mrs. Huck, who replaced her father, the late congressman, William E. Mason, in the national legislature when he died, is the mother of four children. The reason she went through the ordeal she said, was to develop an understanding "of the other fellow's viewpoint."

"The problem I was interested in was my own reactions to the surroundings," she asserted. "I didn't live in the jail days and hie myself out to hotels at night. I was spared some embarrassment by the fact that my husband suggested that I take along some antiseptic soap. He slipped some in my suitcase."

After she arrived in the prison, she was assigned to a job as seamstress. She worked zealously, she said, because the first wrong stitch meant a stretch at scrubbing floors. After she had been discharged from the prison with $5 in her pocket she went to dinner at the executive mansion with Governor Donahey, and made several recommendations which the governor now has under advisement. Then she went to Pittsburgh and got a $30 a month job with room and board at a hotel—the William Penn. All went well until they called her in and told her they had found she was an ex-convict.

"However, they were pretty decent about it," she added. "The house detective told me he couldn't conscientiously allow me to have access to the rooms, but that I might take a job in the kitchen.

"The only thing that unnerved me during the whole time was when I spent three days in the Cleveland 'hoosegow' waiting for transfer to the woman's prison. There the scum of the streets was herded together, people of all nations and colors together and if I had been given to hysterics, that it the place that would have gotten me, but it didn't."

HOUSE STONED IN POMEROY COAL DISTRICT

Pomeroy, July 2.—(UP.)—The stoning of the home of Elmer H. Holmes, president of a Syracuse company operating a mine near here, was the only act of violence recorded today in the heavily guarded Pomeroy Bend coal district.

Lee Hall, head of the Ohio Mine workers, took the stand for the defense in the New Pittsburgh Coal Company's injunction hearing and explained the workings of the Jacksonville wage scale and the 1917 wage scale under which the company's mines are operating.

The coal company is seeking a permanent injunction against union picketers.

American Rivers

The Amazon river, in South America, drains an area as large as that of the Mississippi, but such territory consists largely of wilderness. The length of the Amazon river is 3,900 miles, and that of the Mississippi is 2,460 miles from its source in Lake Itasca, Minnesota, to the Gulf of Mexico.

NEW GAS LINE BEING PUSHED VIGOROUSLY

Undertaking Will Represent an Investment of Six Million Dollars.

Work is being pushed as rapidly as the difficulties of the undertaking allow on a new natural gas pipe line in West Virginia, which, when completed, will be 150 miles long. The new pipe line pierces much wild and mountain-country and will augment the present supply of many Ohio cities and towns with gas from distant fields.

This undertaking, including the pipe line, compressor stations and other equipment necessary, will represent an investment of $6,000,000.

The pipe line itself is but the artery of gas which is thus made available. Connected with it will be other lines from fields and wells of various distances from it. Compressor, or pumping stations will be built to force the gas on its long journey to the people who will burn it. Some of the cities will be burning natural gas that has been brought 300 miles and more to them when the new line is finished and put in commission.

A year will have been required to complete the new pipe line. It is hoped to have the line in service some time next winter. Some of the difficulties in its way are due to the wildness of the country where much of the construction must be done. Others arise from hard transportation conditions, construction going forward in places remote from railroad facilities. A romantic situation, this, of man driving his forces against the obstacles of nature to get fuel that was made, and hidden deep underground, millions of years ago.

The new pipe line is part of the system which supplies the East Ohio Gas company, and represents only one feature of the work constantly going on to maintain a supply of natural gas. Drilling of new wells, drilling old ones still deeper, seeking new fields and gas wherever it might be had, are required to counter the effects of the continuous drain on natural gas. Five states draw gas from the West Virginia fields.

The East Ohio Gas company recently drilled a well in Ohio to a depth of more than 6,000 feet, and at a cost of approximately $100,000, requiring a year's continuous drilling, and turning out to be a complete failure. Several very large wells have been drilled in West Virginia in the quest of gas, one of them a mile and a half deep. This effort likewise was futile. A well is now in the process of drilling which is expected to reach a depth of 10,000 feet.

While the number of people using gas is constantly increasing, difficulties of securing a supply increase in many ways.

DON'T YOU REMEMBER?

Wonder what became of those two-wheeled high carts that the lamp-tenders drove around in when at their work back in the days when our streets were lighted with oil lamps? Remember them? You could hear it coming for several blocks, the cans of oil jostling together in the bed of the cart, and the torch with which the attendant lighted the lamps roaring like a tinner's furnace. For the lamp-tender always made his rounds in the late afternoon, and when he had replenished the lamp reservoir with oil, he lighted the lamp for the night, so another round would not be necessary. Each oil can held just enough to fill the lamp reservoir, and while the attendant trimmed and arranged the lamp, a can overturned over the reservoir filled the lamp for the night. Oil lighting was cheaper than gas, the city council thought, so this outfit was an institution of the days just before the coming of the electric light. And the lamp-trimmer's cart was the nearest approach to the Irish jaunting car that ever was used in Columbus.—Dispatch.

AMUSEMENTS

Baseball fans, it is said, will find much to laugh at in "The Battling Orioles," Hal Roach's new feature Pathe comedy which comes to the Metropolitan Friday. The opening scenes of the comedy picture a baseball game in the year 1874, before baseball came into its own with hundred thousand dollar salaries, dictators, scandals and other attributes of progress. It shows baseball in the rough, very rough, with final scores that read like a duffer's golf card, black eyes and flying pop-bottles. In those days no umpire was considered a good insurance risk and many a ball bat was cracked, not on the flying sphere, but on the cranium of a too argumentative dispenser of decisions.

Another amusing thing shown in "The Battling Orioles" is the collection of facial decorations worn by the gallant players in this epoch of baseball history. Chin whiskers, sideburns, ornate moustaches and "ladykillers" were the vogue and one wonders how these demons of the diamond with their decorative foliage managed to negotiate the intricate plays without becoming permanently entangled.

The story is a modern romance of a young fellow, the son of one of the old "Battling Orioles" who finding his sweetheart innocently involved in a scrape recruits the aged members of the old ball team for her defense, and brings about their rejuvenation in a humorous way. What is said to be one of the most thrilling as well as laughable fights ever shown in a motion picture.

WID GIVES US A LOW DOWN ON THE MOVIES

The movie bosses realized their mistake too late. The National Board of Review, but by that time definite and rather silly censorship activities had developed in various states. Censorship is really a joke. If you were to read parallel reports made by different individuals and committees on the same production you would find them good for many laughs. No individual or committee should undertake to pass upon what should be presented to the public on the screen, any more than they would attempt to tell a newspaper what might be printed. Movie censorship is dying out. It never would have existed if the movie makers had fought the politicians and reformers instead of playing into their hands by establishing the first board of censorship.

Hollywood, July 2.—There's nothing that hands me any bigger laugh than censorship as applied to the committee of persons knows what the movies. Of course, censorship is silly.

The idea than any one person or public should see is a joke. If the theater, newspapers, fiction publishers, music and radio had to submit to some kind of politically appointed committee rule, then I might accept movie censorship.

Oddly enough, the movie bosses themselves originated censorship. Some very thick-headed executives who thought they were being brilliant, established the first board of censors for the movies. Mind you, the poor misguided blunderers actually created what they called the "National Board of Censors" and paid those who worked thereon for passing on new movies. This was done by these supposedly, wise men in an effort to forestall reformers from putting through a political censor law. Actually, of course, they only paved the way for the reformer politicians to proceed with their legislative measures which seemed somewhat reasonable since there had already been established a "National" board of censors.

Thy name I love;

Thy woods and templed hills,

And ring from all the trees
Sweet Freedom's song;
Let mortal tongues awake
Let all that breathe partake,
Let rocks their silence break,

Kanred Outyields Other Varieties

Most Productive Hard Red Winter Wheat.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Many failures of pioneer farmers in the drier sections of the western section of the United States were due to the attempt to grow unadapted crops, says the United States Department of Agriculture, in discussing its varietal experiments with hard red winter wheats in the dry areas of the western United States. The introduction of hard red winter wheat into certain of these localities which had been abandoned by the earliest settlers later made possible a permanent wheat-growing industry. Hard red winter wheat is now the principal crop in many sections of limited rainfall, including much of Kansas and Nebraska, western Oklahoma, north-eastern Colorado, central Montana, and the drier portions of the Columbia basin of Oregon and Washington.

Kanred, in general, was the most productive hard red winter wheat for the Great Plains area. Other high-yielding strains are Alberta Red, Argentine, Beloglina, Blackhull, Karmont, Montana No. 26, and Nebraska No. 60. Turkey and Kharkof, the two leading hard red winter wheats, were found to be practically equal in yield, winter hardiness, and other agronomic characters and in milling and baking qualities. Minturki and Karmont are among the most hardy and Kanred is the most rust-resistant of the hard red winter varieties.

The results of varietal experiments with winter wheat at 15 different stations form the basis of a new publication just issued as department bulletin 1276. A copy may be obtained, as long as the supply lasts, from the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Good Plan for Heading Back Young Apple Tree

Young apple trees should be headed back to about 20 to 30 inches from the ground. If it is a one-year-old tree then all that is necessary is to cut off the top the desired height. If it is a two-year-old tree then the central leader should be removed and from three to five lateral branches retained, these being cut back to about 8 to 10 inches. In each case the lateral branches should be cut to an outside bud. In order to cause the tree to spread properly. After the tree has passed its third year about all that is necessary is to take out interfering branches and keep the tree from becoming too dense. If the tendency is for the tree to produce long slender branches, then these should be shortened in the same way that peach limbs are shortened in, until the tree begins to fruit, after which time little pruning will be necessary with the exception of thinning out the interfering branches.

Building Stave Silo

The main feature in building a silo is to keep the silage as slightly exposed to outside air as possible. For that reason a place that has a tight bottom and sides is regarded as necessary. In recent years, silos made of staves, held together by iron hoops, have been popular. These stave silos are manufactured and sold by men in different parts of the country, who make a specialty of manufacturing them. The farmer need have no difficulty in setting them up.

Garden Plant Destroyers

Potato bugs, cabbage worms and plant lice in assorted variety are garden pests that appear as surely as the season rolls around, and every gardener must be ready to meet and repel the invading hordes of insect destroyers. In addition, the cutworm works insidiously and destroys some vegetables, although committing nothing like the depredations of enemies of the garden that work out in the open. There are also molds, blights and mildews to add to the toll.

FARM NOTES

Don't change an animal's ration abruptly.

Guesswork never will tell whether or not seed corn will grow.

One-half the value of manure may be lost in four months if it is left exposed.

Kohl rabi is an early-season vegetable when at its best, or a late fall one. Put in some seed early.

Oak trees are more subject to lightning than any other kind, according to observations by the federal Department of Agriculture.

The best annual to hide an unsightly object quickly is the castor bean, the most majestic annual in the flower lists. The Zanzibar types are particularly fine.

It is useless to expect sweet corn, tomatoes, the main crop of string beans, cabbages, cauliflower, turnips and other usual garden crops to flourish in shady gardens.

The harder times are the greater the advantages of the very best farmers over the very poor, for the wasteful methods of the poor farmer take all of the small profits resulting from low prices.

Hands That Rock Cradle Must
Cook With Skill, If Marital Happiness Is To Be Maintained

DR. J. ALLEN PATTON

The health of the family is unquestionably the mother's responsibility and upon it depends in large measure the happiness and success of her husband and children. In the opinion of a physician whose chief interest is the improvement of life in the American home, "Happiness in its every day material meaning is largely dependent upon creature comforts," says Dr. J. Allen Patton, medical director of the Prudential Insurance Company. "There can be little happiness without health—health of the positive, vital sort. It gives to the possessor the capacity for the full enjoyment of all good things. It braces him against the inevitable hardships that men in every walk of life are bound to encounter. In the few basic requisites for health none takes precedence over proper food.

"Merely to provide food does not discharge a woman's obligations to her family. She must interpret their needs and supply them by well balanced meals representing the various food elements in proper proportions. The woman who acquires a working knowledge of relative food values and knows the basic elements different foods contain and their purpose in body building, soon develops a certain 'sixth sense' regarding the well balanced meal. It corresponds to an appreciation of harmony in music or symmetry in art. The perfectly balanced meal, consisting of a few dishes cooked to perfection, is the choice of the epicure."

While there has been a marked decrease in mortality according to the experience of insurance companies there is still a high percentage of the chronic degenerative diseases in early middle age. Dr. Patton believes such illness could be materially reduced were more consistent attention paid to diet.

"The inability of the wife to make ends meet is the jarring note that disrupts the harmony of many a family," continued Dr. Patton. "There is no place where money can more easily dribble away than in the home commissary. The pennies that, in the form of waste food or careless preparation, are literally thrown into the garbage pail, may amount to many dollars in the course of the year.

"Wrangling over money is a sad thing that will chill the ardor of the most devoted couple. Were this cause of domestic contention removed there be far greater happiness in the average family and the romance of marriage would last longer."

WHERE GIRLS ARE GIRLS

In the great open spaces where a man's a man, as the saying is, Movies would say, also a girl is a girl. For cowboys, well, as you know, side the pages of fiction and many of them are even more daring and versatile riders than their cowboy rivals. Some of them have said good-bye to U. S. shores recently and sailed for Woolly England, where they proved to the million people who witnessed a series of American rodeos that the world holds no equal of the western horsemen. These cowgirls and others, from the famous frontier events at Cheyenne and Pendleton, will be among the riders, steer "bulldozers" and barrel rollers, who will compete for over $30,000 in cash prizes in the grand rodeo August 13, when the big Chicago Roundup and world's famous rodeo will be enacted for nine days under the auspices of the U. S. Association of Commerce.

Human Tenacity

The scientists in session at Baltimore announced that man is made of glue. That accounts for the human tendency to stick to things.

Origin of "Chapel"

The word chapel comes from capa, meaning a closet. It originally was applied to a chest in which the relics of a saint were deposited.

Ideal Climate

Human health and strength are greatest when the temperature drops to about 56 to 60 degrees at night and rises to somewhere between 68 and 72 degrees during the middle of the day.

Necessary Cares

A man's first care should be to avoid the reproaches of his own heart; his next, to escape the censure of the world.—Addison.

THE STRATEGIST

By MARY T. NOLAN

MRS. JUDSON'S once dark hair was liberally sprinkled with gray. The roses that once bloomed in her cheeks were no longer there.

In the old, dull, uncomplimentary bureau-mirror she thus saw herself. She had often told her husband that a new mirror was needed for the bureau.

"Wait till I get to work," was the answer most often given; and meekly and silently received.

Sam Judson was downright lazy. He was a millwright. Now and then, as the spirit moved him, he worked at his trade for a cotton mill, a mile from his house.

No man—much less a too-considerate wife—could get Sam Judson to work steadily, day in and day out, for any length of time. He read a lot and smoked a lot and jawed a lot; all at his own sweet pleasure; and thus idled away his time—and kept his meek, thrifty little wife worrying about what was to become of them.

One day Mrs. Judson received a letter from her married daughter, Katie, who lived in a distant city. She read this letter to her husband, and he wasn't at all pleased at Katie's suggestion that Ma Judson spend the next six months with her.

This letter of Katie's now gave the mother an inspiration.

She had been sweeping the upstairs room, in which the bureau with the hazy mirror stood. Putting aside the broom, Mrs. Judson opened a clothes-closet door.

From a hook she took a black cloak with shiny jet beadwork of a pretty and quaint design. She put the cloak on, and tied the wide strings beneath a purposeful chin. Next her hand went aloft to the closet shelf, and came down with an article wrapped in paper. Removing a number of pins from the wrapper, she brought to light, and held out at arm's length before her, a dark blue velvet hat with diminutive forget-me-nots tracing a light blue circle above the brim.

It was the hat that she loved—the most becoming and genteel hat she ever had since her marriage day. And Sam always liked her in that hat, too, she reflected, as she adjusted it, before the mirror, to her shapely head.

"You look like you was a millionaire's wife—yes, you do, honey!" the pleased little lady whispered in confidence to her reflection.

The very idea of likening herself to a wealthy man's wife caused her to laugh as at a huge joke, for upon peering into her pocketbook, she saw there one 50-cent piece.

It was about time, she thought, to start something—or starve.

With the unconquerable courage of one going forth to fight for a just cause against a strongly-entrenched adversary, she marched down the stairs to where the indolent man of the house could usually be located.

"Samuel!"

There was something startling in that sharply-spoken name to the colorless, slippered individual seated in a wide-armed rocker by the kitchen stove. No one had ever before called him Samuel, that he knew of. 'Twas always Sam.

Mumbling to himself at being thus rudely disturbed in his cogitations, Sam slowly arose, and, straightening up with an effort, saw a determined-looking little lady gazing scornfully upon him.

Then he let out a roar. "Blow me, if 't ain't my own little Janey! Ma, you near scared me t' death!"

"Might as well be scared t' death as starved t' death," proclaimed the metamorphosed Mrs. Judson. "Samuel Judson, you've not earned a red cent for a month, and there's just fifty cents between us and th' poorhouse! Will you—or will you not—go right down to th' mill, and git to work?"

It was a vulnerable attack, this onslaught by ma on his lifelong, personal prerogative. It actually made him feel sick and weak.

"I'll go—now—right off," said Sam, meek as a lamb. "I'm tired of loafing round here, anyway."

Then a look of fright stole over his face, for he became possessed of an idea that ma would never have shown such an independent spirit if somebody wasn't backing her up. Katie's invitation to ma! Ah, there he had the solution.

The troubled man took his wife's two hands in his, and tremblingly held them, while his eyes, near to tears, looked pleadingly, lovingly, into those of his wife.

"You were goin'—goin' to Katie's?" she heard him say.

"Some other time," was her gentle answer; and, as an after-thought: "It all depends on you, Sam, from now on."

"I'll do right by you, for the future, ma," promised Sam Judson, clumsily endeavoring to tuck under her hat a wisp of grayish hair that had strayed down onto mother's cheek.

A short while thereafter, he was walking briskly down the road that led to the cotton mill.

Mrs. Judson watched him until he was out of sight. Never did she love him more than she did at this very moment.

"Perhaps I was a little hard on the poor man," she commiserated, deep down in her heart. "Still—I kind of feel that there are times when you've got t' use a little strategy t' set things t' right."

The Eating Question

"It's a giddy whirl, this life. People eat animals, animals eat smaller animals, smaller animals eat vegetables, vegetables eat animalcules, animalcules eat bacilli, bacilli eat microbes and microbes eat us. The cannibal takes the short cut."

WE PRINT THE NEWS

LIBERTY BELL

"John Marshall, then chief justice of the United States, died in Philadelphia on July 6, 1835," says an old newspaper account. "On July 8, exactly 59 years to the day of the anniversary of the proclamation of the Declaration of Independence to the people, his remains were borne from Philadelphia to his native Virginia, for burial. During the funeral solemnities the Liberty Bell, while slowly tolling, cracked through its side, forever silenced but not less eloquent in its mute patriotic appeal. It had lived out its life (82 years) of usefulness as men live out their lives. Its active work was done; it had called the people together to preserve their rights under the British crown; it had rung out its clamorous defiance on the great day of the proclamation of the Declaration of their Independence; it had glorified all anniversaries of that Independence. Henceforth, it remains in its ancient place, the silent symbol of not only 'Liberty throughout all the land,' but throughout the world."

Decline in Diphtheria

Between 1918 and 1923 the death rate in diphtheria declined 10.3 per cent. At this rate deaths from diphtheria will be negligible by 1930.

CASUALTIES IN DRY RANKS REORGANIZED

Resignation of Haynes Now
Would Give Public
Year to Forget.

(By William J. Losh, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

Washington, July 2.—Federal Prohibition Commissioner Roy A. Haynes, for four years director of national dry enforcement is slated to be the major casualty in the new prohibition re-organization, it was indicated here today.

A different type of official, perhaps one of the ex-army officers for which Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Andrews has announced a partiality, probably will succeed him in the next few months.

With the ascendancy of Andrews the function of Haynes in the enforcement machinery became unimportant. Andrews dominated the field.

As head of what will amount really to an inspector's department, Andrews desires a new man who will not be hampered in the execution of his inspector's functions by long relationship with many of his subordinates.

The passing of Haynes thus will not be any criticism of his record, but simply in response to a new set of conditions which makes his retention under the new regime inadvisable.

In this connection, a revival of reports that Haynes will run for governor of Ohio were heard today but he refused point blank to discuss them. Political experts pointed out for Haynes to resign now to run for governor with the Ohio primary over a year away would be a politically injudicious move. He would cut himself off from the best avenue of publicity he has and barring something unexpected, would give the Ohio public a year in which to lose sight of him.

BILLROY'S COMEDIANS GOOD SHOW

Last night the Billroy's Comedians repertoire company, now playing under canvas at Mason's field, presented one of their funniest plays, "The Boss of Bar Z" and same was enjoyed very much by the large crowd that attended.

Tonight is announced as super-feature night and tonight this clever company will present their very best play entitled, "Because She Loved Him So." Apparently the merchant's matinee being given this afternoon was a huge success from the merchant's standpoint, anyhow, because as this paper goes to press the street in front of Mason's field was black with people waiting for the doors to open.

Tomorrow, there will be another matinee on account of it being the Fourth and tomorrow night Billroy's comedians will close a very successful week's engagement with the comedy drama, "Don't Change Your Wife."

It is with sincere regret that we see this show leave our city, as it is seldom, if ever, that a tent show has made such a tremendous hit with local theater goers as the Billroy's comedians.

The show is absolutely clean and the people are all ladies and gentlemen and have become regular home folks. There will be many a glad heart next year when this show advertises that they are coming back.

Messrs. Wehle and Hughes, owners of the show, have made many friends in Circleville, as have the other members of the company and all that we can say is, "Best of Luck; Boys, and Hurry Back."

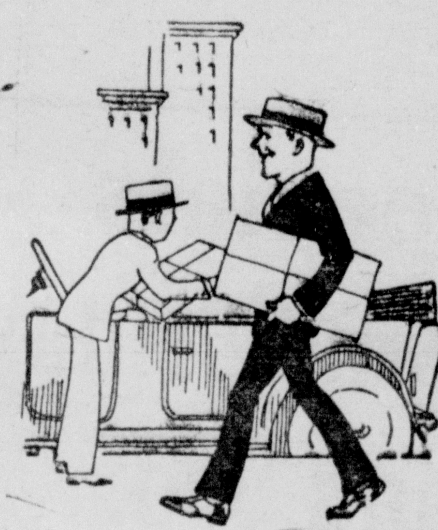

BOY RESCUED

Cleveland, July 2.—(UP.)—Richard Korda, eight, was recovering today from frightful despair, exhaustion and exposure after having been rescued a quarter of a mile out in Lake Erie.

He and three companions had been swimming near the shore when Richard decided to ride a log. The breeze wafted the log and its boy pilot swiftly out into the lake. Richard's naked body was bruised and numb when rescued.
